This yearlong professional development sequence is open to local educators interested in learning how to incorporate Latin American Studies into their classrooms with a particular focus on the topic of immigration. The first part of the sequence will build participants' content knowledge of immigration through presentations by University of California San Diego's leading immigration scholars. Participants will then work in collaboration throughout the school year with the Educational Outreach Coordinator at the Center for Iberian and Latin American Studies (CILAS) to create and implement a unit on immigration in their classrooms. The culmination of the program will be participation in a poster presentation describing their experience in developing and executing their unit, noting strengths and areas for improvement.
